Tapas in Spain

I have been living in Logroño, Spain, for the past two months and going for tapas has become one of my favourite hobbies. Logroño is a relatively small town and it is the capital of the La Rioja region, which is very famous for its wines. What I didn't know before I arrived here is that Logroño is also famous for its quality pinchos, or tapas.

In northern Spain tapas are called pinchos. This comes from the Basque word pintxos. Typically, a pincho is a small serving of food placed on top of a piece of bread. A cocktail stick is used to keep the food in place and these pinchos are typically served with a small glass of wine or beer. It is impossible not to like them!

In Logroño the pinchos on a particular street – Calle Laurel - are so good that they are famous in all Spain. Amazing! In Logroño the way pinchos works is that you go from bar to bar, eating one pincho, often the speciality of the place, at each.

As every bar has their speciality it is difficult to describe a typical pincho. However, if you visit Calle Laurel you will be sure to find croquettes, vegetable tempura, and goat's milk cheese served with walnuts and jam – they're all so delicious. But my favourite pincho is so simple – 3 fried mushrooms on a piece of bread with a prawn at the top. There are two bars which only serve this pincho (there is nothing else on the menu) and it's not difficult to understand why it is so popular after you have tasted them. The mushrooms are fried in garlic, oil and salt! Maybe it's not the healthiest option but I love it!

So, as you can see I am a big fan of the local traditional food here in Logroño and am looking forward to a whole year of tasting Calle Laurel's delicacies!
